wooden or plastic box with pesticide-free soil and dried hay, then scoop out a circular nest in the hay and nestle the bunny into it. Remember to handle the baby as little as possible, since excessive handling can cause distress and even death.

How to Care for a Baby Wild Rabbit (with Pictures) - wikiHow

There's a lot that goes in to caring for wild ducklings, like satisfying their huge appetites. If you've recently rescued some baby ducks, it's important that you get them on a regular, nutritious diet so they grow into healthy full-sized birds. If you just want to feed baby ducks at the park, you should still give them healthy foods.

What to do with a Wild Baby Rabbit? A Step-by-step guide

Rabbit mothers nurse their babies for approximately 5 minutes a day. Both wild and domestic mothers will be in the nest early in the morning and then again in the evening. The milk is very rich and the babies “fill up” to capacity within minutes. Mother rabbits do not “sit” on the babies to keep them warm as do some mammals and birds.
